

Supriya

Thought her children needed both parents for a good life, she had raised them in a violent home

- At 60, Supriya, a 12th-grade graduate, faced challenges with aging, frail parents.
- Endured three decades of physical and emotional abuse from her husband, Anand
- Believed her children deserved a stable family but inadvertently subjected them to a violent upbringing.
- Realized her mistake and was devastated when her children blamed her for their relationship troubles.
- The heartbreaking betrayal left Supriya isolated and shattered

How ISF helped her

- ISF assisted Supriya in launching a small home-based business selling pickles and papads
- The income from the business allowed Supriya to regain her self-worth
- Joined a local elder club, significantly improving her life
- Despite living with her husband, police intervention ended the abuse
- Husband is now very ill and relies on Supriya for care
- Supriya took over his pension and effectively manages the household with her income
